THE CHINA MAIL.

HONGKONG, FRIDAY, JANUARY 3, 1868.

Ir will be recollected that in some recen remarks upon the postal system in China we gave expression to the very general feeling of regret which prevailed as to the want of those facilities in this part of the world which form such useful adjuncts to the post-office system at Our remarks had reference chiefly to the increasing want of a money order office in order to provide for the to become an inmate of such a place. transmission of small sums from port to | Money was paid for her to the two women port. Although we are not in a position | The mistress of the establishment beat her to authoritatively pronounce that a money order branch will within any fixed period be added to the local establishment we have good reason to believe that the subject had, previous to the appearance other hand, the brothel-mistress sent of our remarks, received the attentive a petition to the Magistrate, complainconsideration of the Post-master General. whose acquaintance with the wants of the foreign community in China had already led him to recommend that the "Post-Office order" should become here. as in England, a familiar institution. Whilst uncertain as to whether the ed this plan to get released from her Home postal authorities will concede engagement. (We wonder if this agreethe establishment in question, we may express our lione that in the event of unusual delay the community of this Colony will take upon themselves supplement the action of the executive by forwarding a memorial on the subject. An enormous amount of inconvenience would be spared did there exist a speedy and safe method of remitting small sum to and from the open ports of China and public attention, as it inevitably must until the military contribution and other questions are finally settled, it becomes worth while to note any reasonable mode of retranchment in our colonial expenses. The old Scotch proverb of "mony a mickle maks a muckle" may apply in this case, though at first sight the "mickle" sums in which a saving may be effected may seem small. There is one branch of the public service in which a retreuchment seems not only wise financially but likely to obviate other inconveniences, and that is the Bench of Police Magistrates. At the present moment we (he save) of paying the coolies $1 every have two gentlemen paid for doing what trip, and of giving them something to eat it would fairly appear one might easily perform. If we are correctly informed, each of these draw some £800 per annum in order to administer the justice of the colony in minor matters; and would seem that if one were left in undisputed possession of the bench, justice would not be impeded. while any question as to priority, such as we believe now exists, would be effectually shelved to the advantage of the Colony. Even were the salary of the sole magistrate raised to £1000 per annum, there would be a clear gain of £600 no small advantage considering the present demand for efficient interpreters, towards procuring which the sum thus saved might be There are other departments in which monetary reform might be effected without resorting to measures which would in any way cramp official competence to administer colonial affairs. We have for instance an Auditor General, whose functions it would appear could be as well performed in the Treasurer's Office as in The present Auditor Generalship is, it is well known, maintained chiefly for the convenience of the Consular service, which, with foreign office, scumen, is so constituted that while its political head quarters are situated at express our surprise that an official who, ment of a long-acknowledged fact. THE PAITHFUL WATCHMEN. Mr F. J. Pereira, assistant at Mesers Dent & Co.'s, appeared to-day at the Police Magistracy to charge two Chinese watchmen of that firm, in so far as two valuable telescopes were sorewed from off their stands in the verandah and carried off yesterday morning while the two prisoners were watching, or supposed to be watching, the premises. P. C. 240, while on the beat nearest to Messrs Dont & Co.'s premises observed a Chinaman bearing two telescopes along the Queen's Road about five o'clock yesterday morning, and hailed him; when the thief at once threw down the glasses and took to his heels. The telescopes have been identified, and one them is now useless from the rough usage His Worship said he would remand the case for a week; the prisoners would be bailed out, and they had better find the thief by the time they were brought up on one said he had been in Messrs Dent & Co.'s employ for nearly 20 years.

PROSTITUTES AND THEIR RIGHTS. A curious case was brought before Mr May this morning, wherein a brothel-mistress and a prostitute were the parties. The story runs as follows. A young widow. a dresser of hair, who resided in a village called Shak-ke, was induced by two other women to consent to go to Macao, and then shortly afterwards (on 22d October) sho found herself in this Colony, located in Brothel No. 164, She was to receive Tis. 2 per month as salary; but she did not wish. once or twice, and threatened to sell her on Monday last. The other day, her father (an old man) came with a constable and released her; and the brothel mistress was charged with illegal detention. On the ing bitterly of the proceedings of this young widow. An agreement was duced, which purported to be an engagement on the part of the young widow to serve the brothel-mistress for three years for $40; after receiving which money, the mistress avers that the young widow adoutment was stamped, and whether a stamped receipt was given for the money.) -His Worship said it was a very confused case, and the story of the young widow was a very pulikely one. Still, if the prisoner, chose to keep a brothel, she must see to it perfect willingness. If they at any time wished to go away, she could not prevent them, and it mattered not in the eve of the English law, whether she had given them a sum of money or not. Prisoner was discharged, and the young widow was told that she could go whithersoover she While the subject of finances occupies

As far as the Public Gardens. all went well; but all of a sudden the coolies moved and carried a resolution to the effect that they would not move or carry the chair up the Peak that day. This. conduct struck the M. at the P. as very strange, because he made it a principle previous to their descent, while two coolies always received the $1 the same as if four were engaged. The M. at the P. was annoved as well as surprised at the coolies. and at last gave expression to his annoyance by kicking one of them so severely he had to be sent to Hospital. This however, was only the beginning of M'Gregor's troubles. P. C. Sergeant 271 (Indian here appeared, at the very time he was no wanted; and the M. at the P. resented this low species of espionage by at once flooring the spy (M'Gregor stated his belief that the sergeant must have been in league with the coolies). The Sergeant, however, soon got to his feet, and the moment h did so, his baton got to M'Gregor's head for the M. at the P. received a blow on his left temple which almost stunned him, and brought him to the ground. This proceed ing M'Gregor characterized as very shabb conduct, and, in fact, the Sergeaut (accord ing to him) had treated him shamefully altogether. -The Magistrate said that h had often spoken to M'Gregor regarding the secret of this case, viz., "the drop too. much," and he knew that the M. at the P. was a violent man when he reached that advanced stage. He would fine him 81 for assaulting the coolie, and order him to hire. The Sergeant had evidently unnecessary violence, and had acted undue haste ; and he would punish the
